PRIDE FORGETS (cont’d)

Above all else, pride forgets God. It may talk about God but only as needed to rubbing axes plans. Pride subordinates God to carry out its agenda, and it forgets to see God for who He is. Almighty God is high and lifted up. He is holy, and these expectations are love, fear, and obedience. Pride forgets that God governs the universe and all its inhabitants. God is engaged with you to the smallest of details, and He knows where you are and what you need to go. He wants you to remember His pristine track record of faithfulness. His past provision is a predictor of His future provision. Pride forgets this; it has amnesia to the things of the Almighty. Pride may say it believes in God, but its actions communicate agnosticism. It is too busy to create margin for its Master.

It is imperative you allow Christ to keep your pride in its place. It can only be conquered with humble dependence on God and obedience to His commands. Humility displaces pride and bows down before Divinity in prayer. Humility remembers God’s faithful deliverance from darkness into light. It remembers God’s salvation from sin and self to thank others and to pray for them. It appeals to humility is extremely grateful, and appeals to toward His initiatives. Humility remembers that for what we are, something is out of time.” –C.G. Jung

PRIDE FORGETS

“Pride can be conquered with humble dependence on God and obedience to His commands.”

~ Boyd Bailey

Pride forgets where it came from. Humble beginnings and dependence on others seem to get eroded from the memory of someone influenced by pride. Pride may get promoted, but it forgets those who contributed to the process of success. It is forgetful whether intentionally or unintentionally. Pride loses its focus on who was really responsible in furthering its career. There is too much credit given to self and too little credit given to others. Pride forgets its family. Sometimes it gets so busy in work or play that it fails to involve the ones who provide the platform for its performance. Pride takes family for granted and ignores their needs. It is selfishly wrapped up in itself. Pride forgets the feelings of others; it is insensitive and obnoxious.

Pride is not afraid to crush someone’s spirit on the way to success. Pride forgets others, while humility includes others; Pride takes pride in the credit, while humility shares the credit; Pride discourages, while humility encourages; Pride pontificates, while humility prays; Pride talks too much, while humility listens literally; Pride blames, while humility takes responsibility; Pride is oblivious to good manners and courteous conduct. It is all about itself, with little or no regard for the needs of others.
